Education

Ph.D. Psychology (Cognitive)

Rutgers University, May 2014

Thesis Resolving wh-quantifier ambiguities: Integrating theoretical and experimental perspectives.

Advisors: Julien Musolino & Viviane Déprez

Committee members: Kristen Syrett (Rutgers University), John Trueswell (University of Pennsylvania)

M.Sc. Psychology (Cognitive)

Rutgers University, 2011

B.A. English language and literature

Perm State University, Russia, 2007

Research interests

Computational modeling of pragmatic reasoning, ambiguity resolution, quantifier scope, experimental linguistics, atypical language development, first and second language acquisition, digital humanities

Academic employment

Emmy Noether group leader

April 2024 - present

University of Tübingen

- Department of General and Computational Linguistics

Visiting professor of cognitive modeling (Vertretungsprofessur W2) 2023 - 2024

University of Osnabrück

- Institute of Cognitive Science

Postdoctoral fellow

2018 - 2023

University of Tübingen

- Neuro-Cognitive Modeling Group
- Research Training Group “Ambiguity: Production and Perception”

Visiting scholar

2016 - 2018

Wayne State University, Detroit

- Department of Linguistics

Lecturer, 50%

2015 - 2016

University of Leipzig

- Institute of Linguistics

Teaching assistant

2009 - 2013

Rutgers University

- Department of Psychology

Russian language instructor

2008 - 2009

Rutgers University

- Department of German, Russian, and East European Languages and Literatures
